

COMBAT MINDSET BRANDMARK

New Zealand referencing options

Army Command School

August 2026

Each option is drawn three ways. The brandmark is the symbol alone, for patches, favicons and small applications. The wordmark is the type alone, where a symbol would compete with the NZ Army logo. The lockup is the pair set together, and is what would sit in document headers and on slides.

BRANDMARK

WORDMARK

LOCKUP

A SOUTHERN CROSS Secular, already on the flag and NZDF insignia, and legible at badge size.

B CROSS AND SHIELD Keeps the shield's protection and adds the national reference inside it.

C FERN Read as New Zealand anywhere. The red tip keeps the mark directional.

D CROSS PATCH The reticle patch language, with the Southern Cross at the aim point.

Note. All four use national rather than iwi-specific imagery, so none carries a cultural-consultation requirement of itself. Any final mark should still be cleared through NZDF visual identity, and any later introduction of Māori design elements would require appropriate cultural consultation.
