

TWO CONTINUUMS. ONE LEADERSHIP FRAMEWORK.

One visual. The LDF is the common spine; the two Army promotion continuums are mapped against it, side by side.

THE QUESTION

If Army deliberately mandates leadership development for soldiers as they progress through increased leadership responsibility, why is the same principle not applied consistently to officers?

THE DISCREPANCY

The answer emerging from page 1, drawn as two flows. Then the challenge, in COMDT's posture: is this a conscious choice?

IS THIS DIFFERENCE A CONSCIOUS CHOICE?

IF SO:
what is the rationale for treating Officer and Soldier leadership development differently?

IF NOT:
should Army apply a more consistent principle to development before progression into increased leadership responsibility?

No recommendation. The organisation answers.

VISUAL LOGIC

Two flows, identical steps, one difference: the soldier flow is solid at every step and ends in a deliberate link; the officer flow goes dashed at the point under test and ends in an unclear link. The question is posed in COMDT's posture (are we consciously choosing to deviate, and if so why?), with both branches given equal weight so the page does not argue that the officer system is wrong. It requires Army to articulate the reason, or the change.
