

COMBAT MINDSET VISUAL IDENTITY

1 / 3

Reviewed against the NZDF and NZ Army Visual Identity Guidelines, version 1.0, April 2018

THE GOVERNING RULE

Programmes and projects should not create new logos.

The official NZDF logo should be used alongside the name of the programme or project in plain text.

NZDF Visual Identity Guidelines v1.0, page 34

Supporting: unit and trade patches "should not be used as a logo in any form of internal or external communication" (p9, p33). Portfolios, Commands and Units "use their name in plain text alongside the NZDF logo" (p9).

WHAT THIS MEANS

Combat Mindset is a programme of work.

It does not get a brandmark, a badge or a patch. The earlier symbol explorations cannot be used, however well drawn.

The identity is therefore typographic.

A wordmark, a lockup with the Army logo, and the Army's own graphic elements. Everything below is drawn from the sanctioned system.

A bespoke mark is not impossible, but it is not ours to make.

It would require the Head of Visual Identity and Design, Defence Public Affairs. A badge would require the Chief of Army.

THE THREE COMPONENTS

01

WORDMARK

COMBAT MINDSET set in the Army's own typeface, with the red rule. Used where the programme names itself.

02

LOCKUP

The Army logo with the programme name in plain text. The form required by the guidelines for all collateral.

03

ELEMENT

The Army chevron, used as the recurring signal across Combat Mindset material in place of a symbol.

THE PROPOSED WORDMARK

COMBAT MINDSET

Remain effective. Act decisively. Harder to kill.

THE SYSTEM

2 / 3

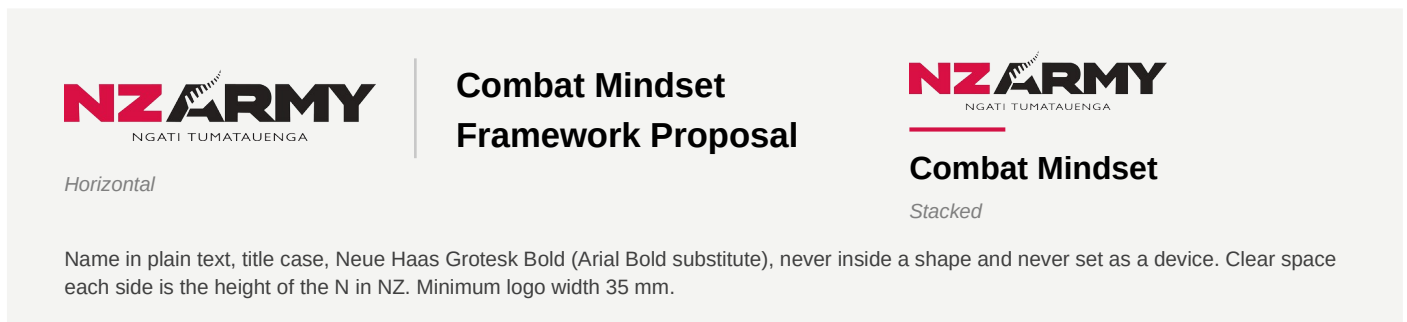

Wordmark, lockup, element, colour and type

WORDMARK — THREE PERMITTED RENDERINGS

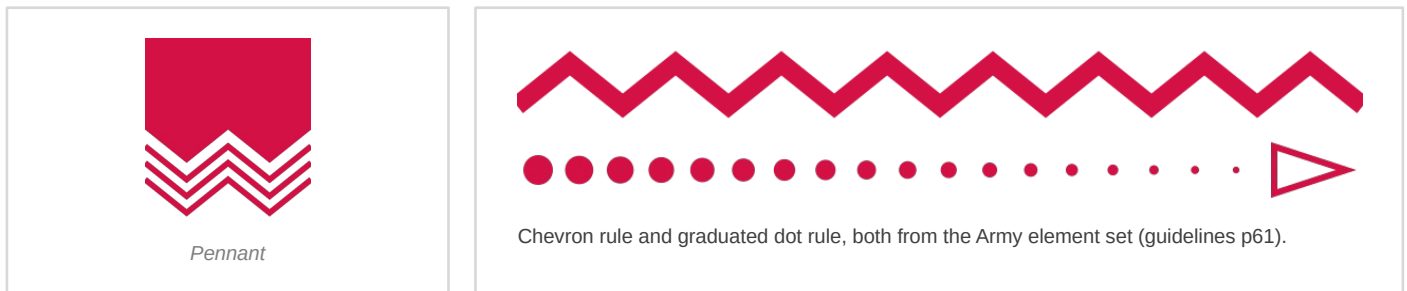

The rule is set to the cap height of the M and always sits beneath the second line. Red on light and dark grounds; black in one-colour work. Never coloured type, never outlined, never set in any face other than the Army's.

LOCKUP — THE REQUIRED FORM ON ALL COLLATERAL

Name in plain text, title case, Neue Haas Grotesk Bold (Arial Bold substitute), never inside a shape and never set as a device. Clear space each side is the height of the N in NZ. Minimum logo width 35 mm.

ELEMENT — THE ARMY CHEVRON, IN PLACE OF A SYMBOL

COLOUR — AS PUBLISHED, NOT AS PREVIOUSLY USED

Correction. Earlier Combat Mindset material used red C62026 and four approximated greens. The published Army values are above; the red in particular is materially different and should be replaced everywhere.

TYPE

Neue Haas Grotesk primary, all headings and the wordmark

Publico secondary, used sparingly for pull quotes and captions

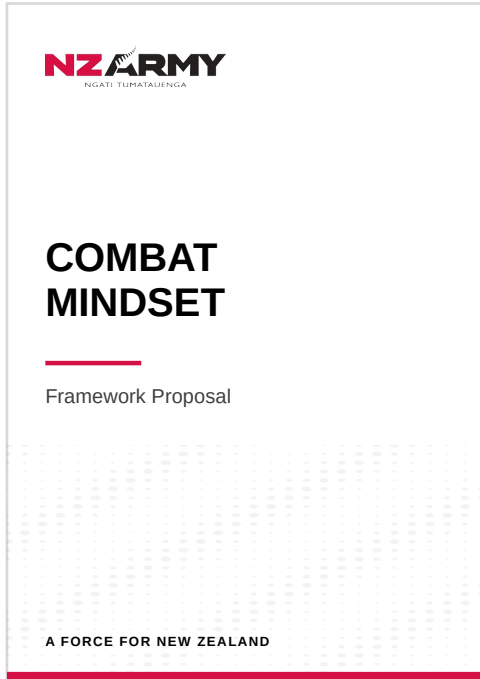

Everyday PC substitutes, per the guidelines: Arial Black for bold headings, Calibri for body copy, Book Antiqua for Publico. The guidelines state no other fonts are acceptable.

APPLIED

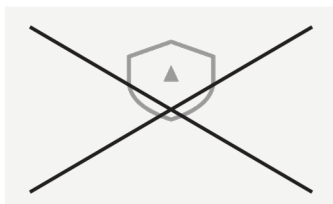

3 / 3

The identity in use, and the uses the guidelines rule out

DOCUMENT COVER

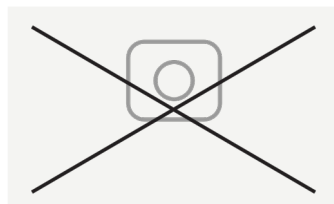

INCORRECT USE — RULED OUT BY THE GUIDELINES

A bespoke symbol

Any invented mark, however well drawn. Programmes do not create logos.

A badge or patch

Patches are heritage items for uniforms. They are not communication assets.

An altered Army logo

The logo's colours, proportions and background are fixed.

A coloured wordmark

The wordmark is black, white or reversed. Red is the rule, not the type.

WHAT TO DO NEXT

- 1 Adopt the typographic identity now.
It is compliant, it needs no approval, and it can be applied to the framework proposal and the ELDA one pager immediately.
- 2 Correct the colour across existing material.
Replace C62026 with D31145 and the four approximated greens with the published values.
- 3 If a mark is genuinely wanted, ask properly.
Head of Visual Identity and Design, Defence Public Affairs, 04 496 0297. Expect the answer to be no, and expect that to be the right answer.

Note. This board is set in Arial so it renders identically on any machine. Production artwork should be set in Neue Haas Grotesk, or Arial Black where that face is not held.
