

Combat Mindset and the NZ Army logo

Six pairings, all built only from the logo and plain text. The guidelines fix the logo, its clear space and its minimum size, and set the name in plain text, title case, in the Army's own face. They leave the arrangement open.

SIX PAIRINGS

Horizontal

Name beside the logo, one clear space away. The pattern the guidelines illustrate.

Horizontal, two line

For where the full name of the framework is needed.

Stacked, hung from the datum

The adopted device separating the two. Compact footprint.

Stacked, plain

The same without the rule. Quieter, and the pairing is looser for it.

Uppercase

Reads harder, but the guidelines set unit and portfolio names in title case.

Running, single line

For headers, footers and spines. The logo drops to minimum size.

WHAT THE GUIDELINES DECIDE FOR US

Clear space	One N height on all four sides, measured from the artwork at 0.531 of the logo height. Nothing enters it, including the name.
Minimum size	35 mm logo width in print. Below that the descriptor stops being readable and the logo may not be used.
The name	Plain text, title case, in the Army's own face. Never inside a shape, never on a rule of its own colour, never redrawn.
Hierarchy	The logo carries more visual weight than the name in every pairing. The name is set at 78 to 86 per cent of the logo cap height.

The recommended pair

One horizontal lockup for headers, slides and correspondence, and one stacked lockup for covers and anywhere the measure is narrow. Both are built from the same two parts and the same interval.

PRIMARY — HORIZONTAL

ALTERNATE — STACKED

On light grounds

Reversed, one colour

RULES

Interval	The gap between the logo and the name is exactly one clear space. It never closes up and never opens out.
Alignment	Horizontal: the name is optically centred on the logo. Stacked: the name aligns to the left edge of the logo's ink.
The rule	In the stacked lockup the rule spans the logo width exactly, at one hundredth of that width. Black, or white reversed. Never red.
Colour	One colour throughout. The logo's own red is the only red in the lockup; the name is never red, never tinted, never outlined.
Backgrounds	White, black, or a solid panel in the palette. Never a photograph, never a pattern, never a mid tone that flattens the logo.
Not a logo	This is a pairing of an approved logo with plain text. It is not itself a mark, and it is not registered, drawn as artwork or used as a badge.

INCORRECT USE

Name larger than the logo

Clear space closed up

Name in red

Name set in another face
